Connecticut

Since the first settlements in 1633, Connecticut has enjoyed a measure of political independence: the Fundamental Orders (1638) proclaimed a democratic principle of government based on the will of the people. The Fundamental Orders may be the first written constitution of a democratic government; hence, Connecticut calls itself the Constitution State.

Connecticut people turned early to manufacturing, making material for every war in which America has fought.

For the Bicentennial, Connecticut commemorated its extensive political and military involvement and its major role in the provisioning of the Continental Army. Her statesmen, Roger Sherman, Silas Deane, Jonathan Trumbull and Oliver Ellsworth, played major roles in uniting the colonies and bringing about their independence. Connecticut provided a large proportion of the courageous men who fought and died in the Battles of Bunker Hill, Saratoga, Long Island and Yorktown. One Connecticut regiment participated in all the hardships of Valley Forge, Morristown and Redding. Among Connecticut's military leaders were Israel Putnam, Thomas Knowlton, David Wooster, Nathan Hale, William Ledyard, Ethan Allen, Seth Warner, Jedediah Huntington, Joseph Spencer, Thomas Grosvenor and, for a time, Benedict Arnold.

The Webb House in Wethersfield and the War Office in Lebanon were sites of strategic planning meetings which altered the course of the war.

The ARBC of Connecticut took a "grassroots" approach to the Bicentennial, encouraging and supporting each city and town in planning an observance that was uniquely its own, springing from the hearts and minds of the citizens. Its goals were to encourage each of the 169 communities to develop appropriate Bicentennial programs, to increase citizen awareness of Connecticut's role in the Revolution, to develop lasting reminders, to provide suitable official statewide observances and celebrations and to attract tourist visitation to Revolutionary War sites. Connecticut was the first state to achieve 100 percent participation in the Bicentennial Communities Program, with each of its 169 communities achieving recognition.

At the state level, a series of 40 definitive monographs on Connecticut's role in the Revolution are being published, and an official Bicentennial state highway map is now available.

Old New-Gate Prison in East Granby —a Revolutionary War prison for Tories, the site of the first American chartered copper mine and the first state prison in the U.S.—is being further developed. Viets Tavern, operated by the first warden of the prison, has been purchased, and its restoration is being planned.

Connecticut's permanent contribution to the Bicentennial will be a state museum of Connecticut history.

A statewide Bicentennial cookbook is being published, comprising the best of the local cookbooks.

In November of 1976, a Bicentennial exhibit was presented at the Hartford State Armory showing the efforts of the 169 towns, the schools and 42 state agencies—plus a photographic exhibit of grant projects, an art exhibit and a quilt exhibit. Forty-two hours of continuous entertainment employed over 1,600 entertainers.

The Connecticut Bicentennial Ascension Balloon logged over 90 flights at various locations around the state and represented Connecticut at the National Balloon Race in Indianola, Iowa.

The racing trimaran, Spirit of America, represented Connecticut as its official entry in the International One-Man Sailing Race from England to Newport.

The march of General Rochambeau's army across Connecticut was reenacted, a booklet was printed on the Underground Railroad in Connecticut and 20th century pilgrims were honored and a book published about them.

Our monthly calendar of events indicated hundreds of other activities across the state each month, with many ongoing exhibits and festivals. One hundred sixty-nine Lasting Reminder projects were completed by the towns and many more by the state and other organizations. These ranged from books and buildings, bandstands and statues to parks, trails and other projects.

Delaware

When the Delaware American Revolution Bicentennial Commission set forth its 13 month program, it did so with the intent to create a design for participation by all the state's citizens. When that program came to a close on September 30, 1976 with the sealing of a time capsule in Wilmington's Willingtown Square, the commission could look back and see that it had achieved its goal.

From Claymont in the north to Delmar in the south, Delawareans inspired by the Bicentennial spirit joined in a cooperative outpouring of effort seldom, if ever, seen in time of peace. A total of 55 cities and towns and all three counties became Bicentennial Communities, each planning its own program. While all communities planned programs that honored the past in present celebrations, a sense of the future was much in evidence as they strove to add to their heritage for the benefit of generations to come. Some chose to create museums, others built parks; some, for the first time, published histories. These are but examples; the list is much longer.

Every Bicentennial Community received some financial assistance from the commission through its grants program. Efforts to make the available money go as far as possible led Donald B. Strasburger, the ARBA Region III director, to remark that "Delaware has done more, with less, than any state in the Union."

Each of the 13 months of Delaware's Bicentennial had its own theme honoring some aspect of the state's life: ethnic heritage, religious heritage, youth and education, commerce, labor and industry, the arts, service organizations, sports, independence and the future—all were saluted in a variety of ways. February 1976 was observed as Heritage Month, with costume balls on Washington's Birthday in each of the three counties; the emphasis in June was See Delaware, and August was Open House month.

The commission was responsible for focusing attention on two days especially significant to the state's history—Separation Day, June 15 and Constitution Day, September 20. On June 15, 1776, the Delaware Assembly declared the state free of the British Crown; on September 20, 1776, Delaware adopted the first constitution ever written by a convention elected for that purpose. Beginning in 1973, the commission sponsored annual observances of these two days.

Delawareans were also inspired by national and international events that touched the state. The American Freedom Train made the first stop of its two year run here and drew 70,000 to Delaware Park to see it. A section of the Wagon Train Pilgrimage to Pennsylvania encamped in Delaware for three days and attracted thousands more. Delaware was represented in Operation Sail by the St. Margaret II, a Newfoundland schooner rebuilt by Nicholas and Donna Benton of New Castle, Delaware.

Perhaps most inspiring of all to Delawareans, and certainly the highlight of the commission's program, was the July 1-2, 1976 reenactment of Caesar Rodney's ride from the John Dickinson Home, located southeast of Dover, to Philadelphia. The purpose was to bring the world's attention to the significance of Rodney's accomplishment and his importance to the cause of American independence. With splendid cooperation from towns along the route, Philadelphia '76 and the Delaware County and Pennsylvania Bicentennial commissions, this goal was achieved. Delaware State Police Captain W. Wallace David, portraying Rodney, made the ride without a hitch, receiving warm applause, accolades and gifts at each of his 16 stops in Delaware and Pennsylvania. Months of planning paid off in this highly successful event.

Contributing much to the success of the Delaware Bicentennial celebration was the active personal interest taken by Governor Sherman W. Tribbitt. He was always available to the commission, kept himself thoroughly informed on Bicentennial planning and, perhaps more than any other governor, used the power of his office to assure a successful celebration.

District of Columbia

In 1776, John Adams, commenting on future commemorations of American independence, wrote: "It ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires, and illuminations, from one end of this continent to the other, from this time forward, forever more."

The celebration of the 200th birthday of the United States in the nation's capital offered all Americans the unprecedented opportunity to reevaluate the country's achievements, to consider the problems confronting us and to reflect upon our aspirations for the future. Not only was it a time for commemoration of our historic beginnings as a nation, but, in order to give real value and continued meaning to those principles by which the United States was founded, the Bicentennial also provided a spiritual reaffirmation.

Following the theme enunciated by President Adams, the Bicentennial celebration in Washington, D.C. focused on festivals and programs that reflected the rich culture and heritage of our citizens, our city and our country. Exhibitions in Washington's museums and galleries of art, as well as the reenactments of famous events held in Washington's parks, recaptured the history of our country and its people. Bicentennial Washington also offered a series of concerts, songfests, religious meetings and special events on the grounds of the Washington Monument, Lincoln Memorial and Jefferson Memorial . . . songfests, ethnic arts performances and special events in the mini-parks of the city . . . commemorative performing arts productions from around the city, country and world . . . state days, territorial days and international days . . . boat and walking tours to fit every interest . . . and the national Children's Bicentennial Island, to be completed in 1977, an innovative park and recreation area that pioneers in specially designed play areas and facilities for the handicapped.

Bicentennial visitors to the nation's capital were greeted by the city's Junior Ambassadors, a corps of young people with information on where to eat, what to see and how to get places. Visitors were faced with the task of exercising freedom of choice, for in Washington they could explore the capital and the community, the historic and the contemporary, the familiar and the offbeat.

The Bicentennial celebration in the nation's capital came to a climax on the 3rd and 4th of July, 1976, with millions of people throughout the world witnessing in person and on television the special events and ceremonies, the parade and a display of fireworks the likes of which has never before been seen in Washington.

While the District of Columbia was indeed host to the nation, many programs existed for and by the people of the city. Many are ongoing into the third century, and responsibility for them has been moved to appropriate agencies within the D.C. government.

In retrospect, John Adams would have been proud of the manner in which the 200th birthday of American independence was celebrated in the city of Washington, D.C.

Florida

The Bicentennial in Florida might have ended with another fireworks extravaganza and left only memories, but a lesson learned from history created a Bicentennial celebration aimed at improving life in the Sunshine State.

Florida's formal involvement in the Bicentennial dates back to 1970, when the Florida Legislature passed a law creating the Florida American Revolution Bicentennial Commission with 28 members and the dream of a flashy celebration.

The history lesson that changed the original dream into a desire to create lasting reminders was presented during the first Bicentennial commission meeting, December 18, 1970, in Tallahassee. The late Pat Dodson, the commission's first chairman, told the commissioners, "Now I think you will remember, we had the Civil War Centennial several years ago and the people who participated learned a great deal." Dodson emphasized that what people learned was what to avoid. "I think there were some regrets, quite frankly. They realized restaging battles and this sort of thing left little behind when it was all over." Dodson said the Civil War celebration amounted to a series of spectacles. And he continued, "The tone of the coming Bicentennial, I think, is somewhat more serious; has far-reaching possibilities in improving the country. . . ."

Since the time of that first meeting, the commission's goal has been to improve the quality of life with projects created on behalf of the Bicentennial.

In 1971, the commission promoted creation of County Action '76 Steering Committees. Using as a model an Action '76 Committee originated in a pilot project by the citizens of Pensacola in Escambia County, the state commission set up Bicentennial steering committees in Florida's 66 other counties and provided administrative funds for the committees' basic operations. The commission devised means of supplementary funding for committees by offering for sale the governor's Bicentennial medallions and the state's commemorative Bicentennial book, Born of the Sun.

As local committees sprang up under the guidance of county steering committees, additional money-raising projects were originated and promoted locally to supplement the state agency's work. The commission and its programs have been operated without state tax dollars. The primary sources of funding for the Florida Bicentennial commission have been pari-mutuel receipts and federal grants.

The Bicentennial commission's projects have been designed to offer statewide benefits. One of the nation's most innovative and lasting projects is the ambitious reproduction of 25 rare, out-of-print books in the Floridiana Facsimile Series. The commission also conceived and funded a series of five annual history symposia that have increased understanding of Florida's colorful past, and they published the symposia findings.

While books and studies of historic places were being prepared, attention was also paid to the historic sites themselves. One of America's most widely publicized and most popular Bicentennial projects has been the Florida Bicentennial Trail. The 52 site trail provides a journey from the prehistoric past through the nation's oldest continuous settlement at St. Augustine, which was founded by the Spanish in 1565 and occupied by the British during the Revolutionary War. It ends chronologically with the futuristic Kennedy Space Center.

In addition to a trail Floridians could visit, the commission decided to create a project that would visit Floridians. After opinions of museum experts were reviewed by the Buildings, Exhibits and Graphics Subcommittee, the American Bicentennial Florida Exhibition was established in three traveling trailers.

Another means of bringing aspects of the Bicentennial to the people was promoted by the Films Committee, which conceived the motion picture, Florida On My Mind, and promoted the commission's production of the film, Florida: First and Last Frontier.

Increased involvement of students was encouraged by the Education Committee, created in 1975. Students demonstrated their interest through participation during Bicentennial Schools Festival Week in April 1976. More than 700 Florida schools have received commission recognition for projects conducted that week.

The commission never lost sight of its primary goal. The improvement of the quality of life in Florida has remained dominant throughout the past six years of the commission's existence. Commission grants have contributed to funding for more than 50 historical publications, in addition to projects furthering the arts, human services, ecological pursuits, historical restorations and creation of new recreation areas and museums.

It is the nation's Bicentennial that has provided the incentive for the greatest cultural boom in Florida's history. Long after the glow of July 4th fireworks has faded to a spectacular memory, Floridians will continue to benefit from lasting reminders of the Bicentennial birthday.

Georgia

Georgia, an "American original," is indeed a better place to live, to visit and to experience as a result of its people-oriented participation in our nation's Bicentennial.

Cities and towns across the state united in a commitment to bring all elements of a community together, working toward common goals. To achieve these goals, 196 local Bicentennial committees were established around the state. Parks were built, new libraries constructed, restorations completed—the entire community participated.

"People participation" was the key element to the success of the state's major Bicentennial project, the Georgia Heritage Special. This unique traveling rail exhibit was designed by University of Georgia art and interior design students and featured displays and stories of colonial Georgia history. The train was staffed by retired senior volunteers from throughout the state. Over 250,000 Georgians in 27 communities viewed the train during its six month tour. The Heritage Special got everyone involved and helped the Georgia Bicentennial commission realize its dream of taking the Bicentennial to the people.

The Bicentennial also provided Georgians a unique opportunity to examine and appreciate the past, assess the present and plan for the future. Georgia Archives Traveling Exhibit Service (GATES) was established to provide exhibits on various topics relating to colonial Georgia. DISCOVERY involved students and teachers in folklore and local history projects. Our heritage was commemorated with the reinterment in Augusta of Colonel William Few, one of Georgia's two signers of the Constitution.

The present was celebrated with a festive opening day of the 1976 Georgia General Assembly, featuring costumed legislators and historical vignettes and speeches by Governor George D. Busbee and ARBA Administrator John W. Warner. Major shopping malls sponsored Bicentennial exhibits and displays. Citizens participated in the traditional parades, barbecues and other activities.

Commitment '76 asked individuals, businesses, civic clubs and other organizations to plan for the future by accomplishing something worthwhile as their gift to America on her 200th birthday. High school seniors set goals for America's third century at a Bicentennial Youth Congress. A drive to register 200,000 new voters by 1976 was endorsed. College students got involved through the Bicentennial Intern Program and earned college credit for work on Bicentennial projects. Participation in Bicentennial activities earned youngsters a patch through the Georgia '76er program.

People became involved, and an overview of how they participated is found in the documentary film, For Generations to Come.

Georgians of today, like their forefathers, take active roles in the events that shape their lives. Through thousands of programs at both the state and community level, they accepted the challenge of the Bicentennial—to make century three USA an even better place to live.
